

Linh Huynh is currently serving under AmeriCorps with Child and Family Policy Center (CFPC) to promote sustainable nutrition plans and healthy childhood habits. Prior to joining CFPC, she worked with Khmer minority groups in the Mekong Delta.

As a international volunteer in Vietnam under the Ford Foundation and Volunteers in Asia, Linh established health outreach workshops and projects promoting mentorship, service leadership, and community health awareness. The projects aimed to link university graduates with non-profits and at-risk youth to provide stable relationships and education advocacy. She as a BA with honors in biological and cultural anthropology from Northwestern University and has experience in domestic and international non-profit settings, participating in Katrina reconstruction in New Orleans, volunteering for HIV/AIDS center in Ho Chi Minh City, and working with sex trafficking returnees in the Mekong Delta.

Linh was born in Vietnam and came to Des Moines, IA at the age of four, learning English through juicer and rotisserie infomercials. She has an underscored talent of palm reading and has a fear of dancing in public. She has also recently learned to swim and is in the process of becoming a talented pianist.